ABSTRACT

The state is the main subject of the international Law, there are three basic elements to form a state. These elements are people, region, and government. But the all these elements are not enough by itself and there should be a standard inside the international law which characterizes the state to another political, administrative and regional units. This standard should be legal and that is what is known Sovereignty. One of the most important issues that raises argument is the Case where one State attacks or invade another one and the later tries to Control the region of the first state completely. This is what is Called military occupation. The occupation does not shift Sovereignty into the state which made occupation.
